ABSTRACT

The Clarke Historical Library at Central Michigan University has a rich collection of textbooks that would have been used in one-room schools. The bibliography of this collection contains approximately 700 entries, divided into the following subject areas: language arts; social sciences; sciences; health; art; music; and historical books about textbooks, teaching, and schools. Language arts is further subdivided into primers, foreign language primers, spellers, elocution, readers, basal readers, grammar, and writing. Social sciences is further subdivided into civics/government, history, geography, and Michigan. Subdivisions under science include arithmetic, botany/natural history, geology, science/natural philosophy, astronomy, chemistry, and mathematics. Entries consist of the author, title, publisher, city and state of publisher, date of publication when available (most are in the 19th and early 20th centuries), and number of volumes or pages. The online version has exhibits on students, architecture, teachers, and a day at school. (TD)
